Evaluation of the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC) Warrior Transition Course (WTC) Roy C. Campbell.2006 This report presents an assessment of the Warrior Transition Course (WTC) training program, which is designed to provide initial entry training under the Blue to Green (B2G) recruiting program. The analysis was performed by ARI at the request of the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC). The assessment had four objectives: (1) provide a detailed overview of the WTC program and its participants, (2) prepare electronic databases of survey data, (3) conduct a comparative analysis of WTC and basic combat training (BCT), and (4) provide results of the assessment to include recommendations. A case study method was used and input was gathered through observations, interviews, surveys, and documentation reviews. Ten specific findings about the course were provided along with selected recommendations. The findings were as follows: (1) most WTC attendees were prior service, not transfers on active duty; (2) BCT and WTC were not comparable activities; (3) there was significant Soldier dissatisfaction in WTC; (4) Soldiers were not accurately informed about WTC prior to attendance; (5) physical demands predominate WTC issues; (6) WTC was too short; (7) leadership training was a concern; (8) administrative issues detracted from training; (9) use of Drill Sergeants was controversial; and (10) WTC will change when the course is transferred.--DTIC.

Rebuilding the Schoolhouse .2001 Competition for scarce resources -- both dollars and soldiers -- has driven the Army to explore ways to reduce the costs and infrastructure needed to conduct military education and training. Resources devoted to military education and training are substantial; in FY00, the Active Component training institutions cost the Army $5.7 billion to run and absorbed 44,500 staff and 74,000 trainee man-years. The Army not only wants to reduce the resources it devotes to the training base, it also seeks to improve the performance of its schools. To achieve these goals, the Army has undertaken various initiatives to restructure and modernize its individual training system, including, for example, establishing the Total Army School System and The Army Distance Learning Program (TADLP). The task is a tough one: improve performance while reducing resources. The range of strategies the Army could pursue complicates the task. Which of them offer the best chance for success? RAND Arroyo Center has examined the Army's recent initiatives along with a number of others, and its analysis suggests that four strategies could help the Army achieve its goal: (1) Integrate Active (AC) and Reserve Component (RC) training institutions, (2) Expand the use of educational technologies in Army schools, (3)

Leverage flexible distance learning technologies, and (4) Increase the use of the private sector in Army training. (3 figures, 10 refs.).

Army School Training Performance of EM Scoring Low on AFQT (U) William H. Helme.1964 In response to the Army's need to attain optimal use of manpower skills and aptitudes, the New Classification Techniques Task is engaged in a continuing series of studies to develop increasingly accurate and differentiated measures of individual potential. One objective of the Task is to determine the extent to which men of low or low average general ability can be successfully trained in Army school courses. Studies to evaluate Army classification tests as predictors of success in MOS training included enlisted men admitted from 1953-1957 whose AFQT scores were below current enlistment standards. From available data on 48 courses, estimates were made of the expected success in training of enlisted men in AFQT category IV (10th to 30th percentile) and in lower category III (31st to 49th percentile). Substantial numbers of AFQT category IV enlisted men could successfully complete MOS training courses of moderate or low difficulty level. However, supplementary aptitude area prerequisites are essential to assure selection of men who have sufficient probability of success in a given course to keep attrition at permissible levels--usually under 10 percent. For the more difficult courses, failure rates of category IV men were estimated as generally exceeding acceptable levels, even in courses for which the men had attained the requisite 90 or 100 aptitude area scores.
