Constraint Solving and Language Processing Henning Christiansen, Peter Rossen Skadhauge, Jørgen Villadsen.2005-05-30 This volume contains selected and thoroughly revised papers plus contributions from invited speakers presented at the First International Workshop on C-straint Solving and Language Processing, held in Roskilde, Denmark, September 1-3, 2004. Constraint Programming and Constraint Solving, in particular Constraint Logic Programming, appear to be a very promising platform, perhaps the most promising present platform, for bringing forward the state of the art in natural language processing, this due to the naturalness in specification and the direct relation to efficient implementation. Language, in the present context, may refer to written and spoken language, formal and semiformal language, and even general input data to multimodal and pervasive systems, which can be handled in very much the same ways using constraint programming. The notion of constraints, with slightly differing meanings, apply in the characterization of linguistic and cognitive phenomena, in formalized linguistic models as well as in implementation-oriented frameworks. Programming techniques for constraint solving have been, and still are, in a period with rapid development of new efficient methods and paradigms from which language processing can profit. A common metaphor for human language processing is one big constraint-solving process in which the different (linguistic and cognitive) phases take place in parallel and with mutual cooperation, which fits quite well with current constraint programming paradigms.

Interactive Interpreting Jean E. Kelly.2016-04-02 The work of sign language interpreters has evolved from a mostly monologic style of interpreting to the current use of an interactive style of interpreting. Research has shown that most of an interpreter's work occurs in settings that involve face-to-face interaction with fewer than five participants, including the interpreter. Interactive interpreting may appear to be easy, but it is demanding work. Interactive interpreting is present in the business world for job interviews or job reviews, in the medical field during examinations and procedures, in the educational setting when students meet with counselors or teachers, and in personal settings during social events. Despite all this work in interactive interpreting, the idea of examining what happens within the interpreting process has occurred relatively recently. The need is even greater as more deaf consumers start using video relay services (VRS). Even though VRS is a relatively new service, its rapid growth has created a great need for highly skilled interpreters who understand how to effectively interpret interactive discourse, especially because of the sensitive nature of many calls.
